1. Applicant's election with traverse of Group I, claims 1-4 in the reply filed on October 18, 2006, is acknowledged. The traversal is on the ground(s) that the search for one group would require a search for the other. This is not found persuasive because the argument simply isn't accurate. The cutting tool of claims 5-6 is properly classified in class 407, subclass 11, which is directed to cutters having various fluid paths within them. The method of machining would be in class 409, subclass 132. Since method claims 1-4 have no explicit details of the cutter, there is no reason for one to search the cutters of class 407. Similarly, since the cutter of claims 5-6 is unconcerned with a method of machining, there simply is no reason to search class 409 for the cutter.

The requirement is still deemed proper and is therefore made FINAL.

2. Claims 1-4 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention. Regarding claim 1, line 4, it is not clear what constitutes a threshold of "high concentration of oxygen." In other words, above what percentage constitutes a "high" concentration of oxygen?

3. Claims 1-4 are objected to because of the following informalities: the reference numerals throughout the claims should be placed in parentheses. Appropriate correction is required.

4. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Art Unit: 3722

5. Claims 1, 2, and 4 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Flom et al (3,990,332). Lines 25+ of column 1 discuss certain cutting tools as being resistant to oxidation.

In order to reduce wear on a cutting tool, lines 11-38 of column 2 disclose a cutting method of providing the atmospheric air of the cutting environment with 50 to 100% of gaseous oxygen that reduces the propagation of a notch on the cutting tool. Regarding claim 4, lines 1-5 and 43+ of column 4 disclose the use of a nozzle/tube to supply the oxygen.

6. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

7. Claim 3 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Flom et al. The 50 to 100% value discussed in Flom et al is higher than 40%. Considering the material of the tool and/or workpiece, it is considered to have been obvious to have experimented with various percentages of oxygen in order to determine the proper percentage which will reduce wear on that particular composition of tool, including values of up to 40%.
